This, in turn, can be used to recover the. The overall aim of this proposal is to determine the basic mechanisms by which the multi-hormone regulated protein p53 participates in a variety of biological processes. Our studies have led to the identification of a family of novel p53 binding proteins, the 'p53-binding proteins', which form a complex with p53 and directly modulate the cellular function of p53. Based on the hypothesis that a key role of p53 is to prevent genomic instability, we proposed that these novel binding proteins may contribute to the biological function of p53 by inhibiting the activity of p53 towards a variety of DNA-binding target genes. In this context, we also proposed that the inhibition of p53 by the 'p53-binding proteins' may be an important mechanism for the downregulation of p53 in response to stress signals. This hypothesis is consistent with recent data demonstrating that p53 is capable of being induced at the protein level following specific stress signals. The aims of this application are: i. to study the binding of p53 to these binding proteins; ii. to determine the structure and regulation of this novel family of p53 binding proteins; and iii. to determine the biological function of these novel p53-binding proteins. In addition to delineating the molecular basis of the interaction between the multi-hormone regulated protein p53 and the 'p53-binding proteins', the proposed studies will also provide novel information on the mechanisms by which p53 protein expression is regulated in the cell.
